

SYNOPSIS Travel back through history, over 27,000 years into the past, when Arctic glaciers reached as far south as London and people faced a daily struggle not just to survive as individuals, families or groups, but to avoid the ultimate extinction of the species. A key moment in the course of our history saw the two branches of humankind, the Neanderthals and Cro-Magnons, face off against the backdrop of perilous cold, harsh conditions and massive predators. But how did our branch of humans survive when so many powerful species did not? Discover the many lessons left frozen in time and learn the dark truth feared by many experts: that a new Ice Age may be just around the corner.
