

SPUTNIK MANIA

A must-see documentary about the 1950's arms and space race

The 1950s had been a heady time for Americans. We were the most powerful nation on earth, the leader of the free world. We were the best, the richest, the smartest—and we knew it down to our very core. Then came Sputnik.

SPUTNIK MANIA vividly recalls the impact the satellite had on the American psyche, and how the shock catapulted the nation from complacency into action. Within the year, NASA was born, states instituted massive educational reforms, and a new breed of researchers—rocket scientists—focused on a single critical goal: winning the Space Race.

- Narrated by Liev Schreiber, the film is based on Paul Dickson best-selling book Sputnik: The Shock of the Century.

- In 2008, the theatrical film showed in 25 cities across the nation and received outstanding reviews from The New York Times, The Hollywood Reporter and other major publications.
- Features fascinating interviews with Sergei Khrushchey, Susan Eisenhower, Paul Dickson, and Scott Hubbard.
