

THE WILD HORSE REDEMPTION

Art Not Final

A visually striking, extraordinary true story about second chances

To ensure wild horse populations remain stable and sustainable in the American West, thousands of wild mustangs are captured each year and trained, sold, or put out to pasture. Some end up in the "Wild Horse Inmate Program," through which inmates at the East Canon Correctional Complex (East Canon, CO) learn the methods of horse whisperers to tame and train the mustangs for adoption. THE WILD HORSE REDEMPTION traces the incredible stories of both the horses and the inmates, masterfully intertwining their parallel fates and their mutual struggle towards rehabilitation. Beautifully shot in the rugged foothills of southern Colorado, this captivating film takes viewers on an intimate and uplifting journey of freedom, discipline, and redemption.

- Directed by Academy Award®-winning filmmaker John Zaritsky (Just Another Missing Kid) the film was a standout at the Toronto and SXSW film festivals in 2008.
- National Television Premiere on Sundance Channel on July 14, 2008 with a re-airing on Animal Planet in prime time in November 2008.
- Inspired by the critically acclaimed magazine article 90 Day Horses by Alison Griffiths and David Cruise.

"The awesome sound of thundering hooves... stirs the soul and fulfills its potential beautifully."
