

SYNOPSIS Henri Cartier-Bresson may be considered the father of modern photojournalism, but he was not solely a photographer. Several documentaries, shot between the 1930s and the 1970s, bear witness to his affection for the cinema, a medium that he sees as "an alternative to photography in the way it sees the world and captures its movement."

The first disc in the set compiles five major works directed by filmmaker Henri Cartier-Bresson, while the second disc compiles a series of documentaries about him, which allows us to (re)discover his powerful and rare photographic work.

NEW RELEASE: ARTHOUSE FILMS

HENRI CARTIER-BRESSON: COLLECTOR'S EDITION

A special 2-disc box set featuring documentaries on the legendary photographer/filmmaker as well as his powerful work

- Henri Cartier-Bresson: The Impassioned Eye shipped over 17K units; this special collector's edition includes that acclaimed film, three additional docs, one montage film of his photos, five of Cartier-Bresson's major original films as well as one of his final works, and a 32-page booklet featuring his powerful photos, all in a gorgeous collectible package.
- Timed to release before the first retrospective of Cartier-Bresson's works in the US in three decades opens at the Museum of Modern Art in NY (April 11-June 21, 2010) and then travels to the Art Institute of Chicago and San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.
- Cartier-Bresson's life reads like a history of the century: World War II, China, Egypt, Mexico, India, Sartre, Matisse, Gandhi, and Cuba all became subjects of his famous "decisive moment" style.
- Grassroots marketing outreach will target photography and documentary fans, including outreach to the International Center of Photography's members.
- PR campaign will include outreach to photography and documentary sites and publications, as well as other cultural outlets.
